Vector Security Pledges Corporate Support for Project Home Again!

Campaign to help increase public awareness of missing children

Philadelphia, PA (July 28, 2010): Vector Security announced that it has made a corporate pledge to support Project Home Again. Project Home Again is a national effort undertaken jointly by the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children (NCMEC) and the Mechanical Service Contractors of America (MSCA).

The program seeks to return missing and kidnapped children to their parents through the use of a public awareness campaign. The campaign involves the displaying of posters, depicting the likeness and personal information of missing and kidnapped children, on service vehicles used by participating companies.

Vector Security's involvement will include a fleet of nearly 300 service vans and uniformed guard and patrol vehicles, which travel through the Mid Atlantic states, Florida and California. According to Ms. Sally Cox, Vector Security's Director of Purchasing and Fleet Manager, the idea came about after hearing about the program from television coverage in the Philadelphia, PA market. "Vector Security has supported the National Center for Missing & Exploited Children through several programs connected with our National Accounts Division. Our new participation in Project Home Again will help drive our commitment to the NCMEC throughout our branch office service network."

John A. Murphy, Vector Security's President and CEO, stresses that his company's support of Project Home Again ties directly into Vector's core corporate values. "We're in the business of protecting the things our customers cherish the most and that certainly begins with children. Given our continuing dedication to the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, this opportunity allows us to root this valuable organization further within our large and expanding branch office network. If we can help only one child make it back home, or bring his or her plight directly to the attention of the general public, it will all be worth it."

About Vector Security: Vector Security is a leading provider of electronic security services. The company operates more than 35 offices throughout the country, providing services through its branch offices, National Accounts Division, Authorized Dealer Services Division, and Vector Security Patrol, which provides guard and patrol services. Vector is owned by The Philadelphia Contributionship, a private insurance company founded by Benjamin Franklin in 1752. Three of its founding directors – Benjamin Franklin, John Morton and Robert Morris – were also signers of the Declaration of Independence.
