Joe English is appointed Vice President of Vector Security's National Accounts Division

Pittsburgh, PA: Vector Security Senior Vice President Michael T. Grady has announced that Joe English has been promoted to the rank of Vice President of Vector's National Accounts Division.

English, who began his career in the electronic security industry over 22 years ago, came to Vector in 1990 as general manager of Vector's Leesburg, VA branch office. Shortly thereafter, English left the branch office network to work alongside Michael Grady on the development of Vector's National Accounts Division.

Grady commented that the division, which today services many of the nation's most recognized retail chains, began literally in Joe English's basement. Our President, John A. Murphy wanted to begin a campaign to develop national-type accounts at a time when we completely lacked the infrastructure to do so. Joe rolled up his sleeves and did just about everything to accomplish that goal, from helping create our new business model, to establishing an office, hiring a staff and managing the day-to-day growth of the business. "Today, Vector's National Account model is considered by many to possess unique elements which make our services better; most of which were pioneered by Joe and his fledgling staff during the division's early days," says Grady.

English, who credits his success to his hands-on management style, indicates that Vector's National Account Division gave him the opportunity to make a difference. "Most of us dream about having a career that allows us to strike out and literally make something great from nothing. That's exactly the experience I've had here, and I appreciate the hard work of everyone who has made this division what it is today."

Joe English works out of Vector's National Accounts Division which is headquartered in Manassas, VA. His promotion was announced at Vector's holiday celebration earlier this year. The event had an Academy Award theme, and during the celebration Joe's star was uncovered.
